

7. Why is adherence to notice and hearing requirements contrary to the public interest and the immediate adoption of the rule is required?

Per SL 2012-176, the use of excretions from a NC harvested cervid as an attractant to take cervids throughout the state is allowed, however this creates the potential for the prions that cause chronic wasting disease (CWD) to potentially move to uninfected areas.

This rule will prohibit the use of cervid excretions from deer harvested in the area known to have CWD and reduce the potential for further spread of the irreversible disease to unaffected areas of the state, providing necessary protections to the public and the wild cervid population now and in the future. While not known to spread to humans, the CDC does not recommend eating a deer that has tested positive for CWD.

The first confirmed case of CWD in North Carolina was detected on March 31, 2022. At this time, two other cases have been confirmed. The prohibition on possession and use of excretions from hunter harvested deer in the surveillance area is necessary to assist the agency with efforts in the surveillance area to control spread of CWD.
